OHIO GASOLINE TAX UPHELD BY COURT

HIGHEST TRIBUNAL SPIKES LAST HOPE OF OPPONENTS

Law Will Produce About $10,000,000 to Be Divided Among Cities, Counties and State Highways—Six Judges Concur In Opinion.

Referendum on the Brown gasoline tax act, passed by the Ohio general assembly notwithstanding the veto objections of Governor A. V. Donahy, was prohibited by the Ohio supreme court. All the judges concurred except Chief Justice C. T. Marshall. The act is held to be constitutional.

The decision of the court caused little surprise. It had been forecast that the law was to be held in effect immediately without waiting for the elapse of the referendum period. The victory of Attorney-General Charles C. Crabbe and his associates in interpreting the act is sweeping and the legal department is upheld on every possible question.

Ohio has joined the ranks of states collecting money for the upkeep of streets and highways from users of motor vehicles. The tax on gasoline is 2 cents a gallon and it is estimated that the law will yield $10,000,000 a year. Of this 45 per cent goes to the Ohio Highway department directly, 30 per cent to municipalities on the basis of motor registration and 25 per cent is set aside in a sort of special "jack pot" to be distributed equally among the 88 counties.

The decision in the case is set forth in an opinion by Judge James E. Robinson. In this it is held that the act is a law providing for a tax levy and comes within the exception of the referendum provisions, which say that laws providing for tax levies shall not be subject to the referendum. Furthermore, the court says, the act "does not lay a tax upon property in violation of the provisions of 'uniform rule' section of the Ohio constitution but does levy a tax upon the use of such property for certain designated purposes."

Touching further upon the law, the court says in effect, that the act is not separable so that parts of it might be subject to referendum and other parts not subject by saying that the act appropriates the funds obtained "to certain definite purposes and no other." These are enumerated as a rotary fund, to refund taxes unlawfully collected, to the State Highway department, to maintain and repair roads to the counties for similar purposes and to municipalities for maintaining and repairing streets.

The court says that the phrase "current expenses" as used in the exceptions to the referendum, "includes the expense of keeping in repair and maintaining the highways as distinguished from new construction."

The Ohio Tax commission has the machinery under way for collection of the tax, altho none has been collected pending the outcome of the suit. The law also is under attack on constitutional grounds in the common pleas court of Franklin county, but is presumed the auxiliary suit now may be dismissed unless new questions can be raised.

Thus far the machinery established by the Tax commission consists of one clerk and a stenographer. For lack of room the force has been relegated to space in the hall of the commission of fees. The force must be enlarged at once to begin collection of the tax.

Ohioans have been paying the tax since the assembly overturned the executive veto. Gasoline companies have charged an additional two cents a gallon and have collected a large sum, which is to be turned over to the state.

The test of the law was begun by the Ohio State Automobile association thru a suit by C. C. Janes, Columbus executive secretary. The bill contains a provision which forbids reduction in the amount of motor car license tag fees for the current year altho for succeeding years they are reduced 50 per cent. Janes sought a writ of mandamus to compel issuance of a set of license plates at the reduced fees contending that the Brown act is not in effect because of the referendum. His petition was denied and dismissed.

The decision ends the plans of the Automobile association for a referendum on the measure. No comment was forthcoming after the association had lost the bitterest contest in its history. The general assembly ignored its advice at all times. The association contended that the law was full of blunders and that several kinds of motor fuel might escape taxation entirely. The assembly refused to heed the charges.

The decision represents the first final victory which the lawmaking branch has won over the executive.

The bill was opposed by many cities because it is designed to take money from cities to distribute among rural counties. Cleveland, Cincinnati, Toledo, Columbus, Dayton and other cities lose many millions of dollars annually by the tax, while many small counties receive far larger sums than they contribute in the form of taxes.

BIG REVENUE COLLECTED IN GASOLINE TAX

Income in 35 States Last Year was Nearly Twelve Millions.

Few Ohioans have any idea of the amount of revenue that the state will derive from the collection of two cents per gallon on gasoline. Thirty-five states had gas taxes in effect last year, according to government reports but four of them with the heaviest registration had none. These four states were Ohio, New York, Illinois and Michigan. The income from gas taxes in these 35 states was $79,734,490.00, most of which went for construction of new highways. The average motorist paid $10.30. The state of California which is about the only state which can be compared with Ohio, collected $11,993,222 from motorists for a two cent gas tax, the same as in Ohio. The amount of revenue from the gas tax in Ohio is estimated anywhere from eight to ten millions of dollars annually. "There isn't as much pleasure riding in Ohio as there is in California so of course the gasoline tax receipts in Ohio won't be as much as in that state, Thad H. Brown, secretary of state, said in discussing the Ohio receipts.

FARMERS STUDY

Following out the request of the Interstate Commerce Commission to the general public asking for assistance in the investigation of the rate structure of public carriers in line with the resolution passed by the National Legislature the Ohio Farm Bureau Federation thru its traffic department is drawing up recommendations of farm groups toward changes believed necessary to eliminate unfairness in present rates applying to agricultural commodities. C. S. Long, traffic manager of the Ohio Federation has been in touch with a number of other state farm organizations which are conducting similar investigations.

HEART TAG DAY VOLUNTEERS OF AMERICA

Circleville People Asked to Contribute Saturday to Worthy Cause.

Permission has been given to a representative of the Volunteers of America to hold a "Children's Heart Tag Day" in Circleville on Saturday, May 23rd, as has been done in other nearby communities.

The following leaders in civic and clerical circles will sponsor the affair: Rev. Robert Lee Baird, Rev. D. W. Hillis, Rev. E. A. Tovey, Rev. O. L. Ferguson, Mrs. D. V. Courtright, Mrs. W. J. Campbell, Mrs. G. G. Leist, Mrs. A. J. Lyle, Miss Agnes R. Butch, Mrs. H. G. Stevenson.

The Volunteers of America, organized nearly thirty years ago by Gen. and Mrs. Maud Ballington Booth, is a national institution having one or more headquarters in every state in the Union. One department of its activities is spiritual work among prisoners in state penal institutions, and for this home missionary work clergymen are regularly employed by the organization. Another phase of Mrs. Booth's work is looking after the families of prisoners often left destitute, while the father serves his sentence.

The work of the Volunteers of America is supported entirely by voluntary contributions and it is for such cases as the above, as well as other unfortunates, that citizens are asked to buy a tag on Saturday and give for it a quarter, dime or half dollar. No sum is too large and none too small to help this worthy cause.

Mrs. Nellie Handcock, representative of the work, is in the city and will supervise the sale.

CIVICS CLASS

The class in civics, forty-five in number in charge of Professor O. S. Thacker visited the state institutions and the general government reserve depot east of Columbus today.

POTATO SEED DISTRIBUTED OHIO GROWERS

Tests Will be Made to Discover Highest Yielding Spuds in State.

More than 60 carloads of certified potato seed of improved varieties have been distributed to growers thru Farm Bureaus this spring, according to C. W. Waid of the state federation. Certified stock produced in this state Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota have been included in this distribution.

Plans are now under way to run test plots in a number of counties this summer in an attempt to discover the highest yielding potatoes of those available for Ohio growers. Some of the strains brought in from other states are higher yielding than others and Ohio growers are anxious to get the best quality seed obtainable. The supply of certified seed produced in Ohio is far from sufficient to meet the requirements of growers and it is hoped that the higher yielding strains may be discovered and steps taken to insure an adequate supply for Ohio growers, according to Mr. Waid.

SAN FRANCISCO BAY IS SECOND

Total Shipping Trade in the Harbor Has Doubled in Two Years.

San Francisco.—That San Francisco bay ranks second only to New York in American commerce is the boast of the chamber of commerce of that city and gives figures to back up its statement. It is said that San Francisco harbor actually handled over its docks $2,018,400,925 worth of commodities in 1923, the last year for which figures are available. Individually, San Francisco's commerce is given as $1,697,788,993, while the difference between the San Francisco bay totals is made up of commodities handled by Oakland, Richmond and other nearby shipping points. These official figures, it is pointed out, have just been published by the United States army chief of engineers in Washington, and they show that 41 piers of San Francisco alone move sufficient commodities to rank her second in American ports, surpassing Galveston, Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore and New Orleans. "Four factors have combined to place San Francisco in unquestioned second place among American ports," says the chamber of commerce. "These are, first, the Panama canal, which drew a closer link between the Golden Gate and markets of the Atlantic coast and Europe. However, due to the war at the time of its completion and unprecedented adjustments which followed, it did not become apparent until after 1920 what a truly wonderful advantage San Francisco gained from the canal. When it is realized that the total shipping commerce of San Francisco doubled in two years from 1921 to 1923, increasing by $1,000,000,000 her cargoes, San Francisco's destiny as the premier Pacific shipping center may be understood. "Second, San Francisco's central position in western United States makes her the logical point of distribution. She is located on the exact median line of population of the Pacific coast states and is nearer to more people living in this territory than any other shipping center. Gateway to Interior. "Third, the port of San Francisco serves directly three-fourths of the state of California. It is the only combined bay and river port of the Pacific coast. Two rivers tap an inland empire here which is larger than all the states of New England, and San Francisco bay is the only outlet for this great territory. If you will imagine all the states of New England placed in a huge valley surrounded by snow-capped mountains and drained by two wide navigable rivers which join and reach the sea; if you will picture the heavily protected harbor lying at the mouth of the joined rivers, which are providing the cheapest transportation outlet for this entire region, you will realize the enviable position in which San Francisco finds herself. For San Francisco bay is not only the 'Gateway to the Orient' but also the only gateway to the rich interior valleys which hold the bulk of the wealth of California. "These principal valleys are the San Joaquin and Sacramento. It was here and in closely tributary territory that more than $250,000,000 worth of agricultural products were produced in 1924, according to conservative estimates, and most of this was marketed through San Francisco bay, California is the first gold-producing state in the Union because of rich seams which lie buried in these 'back-bone' mountains of the valleys which drain into San Francisco bay. "Mineral wealth produced here last year is expected to exceed $150,000,000. As a further index, retail trade in the San Francisco bay region alone was in excess of $220,000,000 in 1924. Manufacturing in this same area, it is estimated, will exceed $1,300,000,000 in the year just closed, all of which is handled from San Francisco bay points. Wide Variety of Trade. "The population tributary to this area served by San Francisco was 2,002,620 on July 1, 1923, according to the United States census estimate for that year. In the 18 months since that time a steady influx of new population has been felt in these interior areas as well as in the San Francisco bay region. "Fourth, San Francisco handles a wide variety of high-grade cargoes. This port accommodates a greater number of different cargoes with a higher average value than other coast ports. Its commerce averaged over $75 per ton in value for 1923. In comparison with this figure, $8.10 per ton was the value of approximately 8 per cent of the Los Angeles cargoes which consisted of oil and oil products in 1923. "San Francisco bay will, it is conservatively estimated, exceed 25,000,000 cargo tons in 1924 and handle the largest tonnage of any Pacific coast port. But, after all, it is not tonnage but value of tonnage which is the best measure of business done by a port and here San Francisco is excelled only by New York with a lead of more than $500,000,000 yearly over the nearest competitor."

Ben Franklin Shown as House Decorator

Benjamin Franklin was interested in household details and papered his own walls. He is quoted as saying: "The little south room I have papered as the walls were much soiled. In this room is a carpet I bought cheap for its goodness and nearly new. The blue room has the harmonica, the harpsichord, the gilt scone, a card table, a set of tea china, the worked chairs and screen—a very handsome stand for the tea kettles to stand on, and the ornamental china. The paper of the room has lost much of its bloom by pasting up."

Later he wrote his wife about the same room. "I suppose the room is too blue, the wood being of the same color with the paper, and so looks too dark. I would have you finish it as soon as you can, thus: paint the wainscot a dead white; paper the walls blue, and tack the gilt border around the cornice. If the paper is not equally colored when pasted on, let it be brushed over again with the same color and let the paper mache musical figures be tacked to the middle of the ceiling. When this is done, I think it will look very well."

Sermon Lost Weight During Its Travels

The vicar considered himself a very good preacher, and he was always ready to hear people's opinions of his sermons.

Meeting an old parishioner in the village, he asked: "Well, Mr. Snooks, and how did you like my sermon yesterday?"

"Ye see, parson," was the reply, "I haven't a fair chance with them sermons of yours. I'm an old man now, and by the time I manage to get to the church all the front seats are taken and I have to sit at the back. And there's old Mrs. Smith an' Mrs. O'Callagher's darters an' Bert Snow an' all the rest of 'em sittin' in front o' me wid their mouths open a-swallowin' all the best parts of your sermon, an' what gets down to me is purty poor stuff, parson, purty poor stuff."

Ancient Love Charms

According to ancient English rural superstition, October was considered the most notable month in the year for love charms. St. Faith brought the first chance for maids to view their future husbands in a vision. The ritual is for three maids to make a dumb cake—one baked in silence—to pass their portions through a wedding ring, and couch themselves in one bed, repeating the charm: "O good St. Faith, be kind tonight; bring our heart's delight." On St. Luke's day a maid should anoint herself with an ointment made of herbs and honey, and pray to St. Luke before sleeping, "In dreams let me my true love see." On St. Simon and St. Jude's day the paring of an apple, thrown over the shoulder, should fall to form the first letter of the future husband's name. No record as to the veracity of these charms is available.

Under the Mistletoe

Authorities differ somewhat concerning the origin of the custom of kissing under the mistletoe. Walsh is of the opinion that it is an innocent survival from the Saturnalia of the ancients when riot and license ran loose. Other authorities claim that it is a survival of the ancient Druids of Britain. The mistletoe is believed to have been given to the goddess of love to keep, and everyone who passed under it received a kiss to show it was the emblem of love. The Druids cut the sacred mistletoe and hung it over the doorways to propitiate the woodland spirits. According to myth, only happiness could enter under the mistletoe, hence the tradition of the kiss.

Old Musical Instrument

Notes of a musical instrument that are believed to have floated in the warm air of Egypt 3,000 years ago were reproduced at the University of Pennsylvania by Prof. Jean B. Beck, who restored a small flute found in the tomb of a noble of the time of the pharaohs. The air enters through slits in the sides of the reeds instead of at the ends, as in modern instruments. Each note and its octave are sounded equally loud at the same time, quite unlike any present day instrument.

Recalling Legislation

A bill which has reached the President may only be recalled by concurrent action of the two houses. Should one of the houses improperly request the return of a bill the President should refuse to return it. The form used is as follows: "Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the President be requested to return to the house of representatives the bill (H. R. —) (title)." After the concurrent resolution passes both houses it is formally transmitted to the White House.

Influence of Religion

Uncle Toby had a neighbor who was in the habit of working on Sunday, but after a while he joined the church.

One day he met the minister to whose church the man belonged. "Well, Uncle Toby," said the minister, "do you see any difference in Mr. Smith since he joined the church?" "Yes," said Uncle Toby, "a great difference. Before when he went to mend the fences on Sunday he carried his ax on his shoulder. Now he carries it under his overcoat."

Ensemble in Lead as Spring Outfit
Tailored Coats Have Plain, Unbroken Back Line—Plaits Featured.

It hardly seems right to talk about suits this spring. Even tailored suits of men's wear material are made up of coats and frocks. They are more than suits. They are ensembles, in several types, two-piece or three-piece, the outer garment being generally a coat, but sometimes a cape.
A New York correspondent of the Canadian Drygoodsman says: Almost without exception, coats of the ensembles are long. By long I mean down to the hem of the dress, three-quarter length or anywhere in between. The few short coats are hip length, boxy affairs. I have seen little unlined kasha coats of this variety in black, navy, rose or some other high shade sold with white kasha skirts or frocks for sports. Occasionally there is a young girl's tailored suit of tweed or men's wear woolen with a short coat.
All long coats have one feature in common, the backs are straight and close to the figure. In the great majority of cases it is a plain unbroken back line. However, there is one exception, the tailored notch collar coat with a belt just across the back like a man's overcoat. Coats of this description are made up in suits and separately.
These suits of strictly tailored materials have straight unbelted frocks of the same goods. They are cut short and scant. Step room is given by a sort of wrap-around arrangement, the back underlapping the front from side seam to center front, or there are plaits. Plaits are one of the outstanding features of spring styles. Tailored dresses have a single inverted plait at the center front running up to the depth of a low waistline and ending in an arrowhead, a group of narrow plaits hanging free from low waistline depth or wider plaits stitched to within ten inches of the bottom of the skirt, or the plaits are at the side. In the latter case, side plaits, inverted plaits or box plaits are stitched to within ten inches of the bottom.

Transforming Old Gown Into Something Suitable
Never, in the history of fashions, have the new styles given more aid to the woman who must transform an old gown into a new one, or must camouflage so that her acquaintances will at least not feel like saying, "If she only would get a new gown!"
First and foremost are the now familiar tunics. It would be a woman lacking very much in resourcefulness who would not take some old gown, skirt, or coat, perhaps turn two into one or make a quick survey of the sales and select therefrom enough new material to make an old frock seem only a distant relative of its former self. And she who is wise enough to pick up such an opportunity will be wise enough to avoid spending too much money on this old frock.
Sometimes in making over a costume one can venture a bit more into the extremes of style than one feels justified in doing when buying a new gown. There are highlights of fashion that are very alluring in the eyes of the present, but which, having seen their most popular days, go out of fashion like a flash, leaving the woman who has invested a great deal in them in a forlorn and discouraged state of mind.
Adventures in dressmaking or dress buying are not for the practically minded woman, whether she can afford them or not. And if they are indulged in by those who cannot afford them, these adventures are left considerably sadder, though wiser.
For Blond Heads
A pink hat for a blond head has been a safe rule to follow for years. A famous milliner has followed it in designing a large capeline hat of crim with a wide, downturned brim of a rose cyclamen tint. The brim is trimmed with ribbon of the same hue and a great chou of this ribbon is posed at one side of the crown.

Cash Diverted From Bier to Give Homes to Poor
Stockholm.—Happy homes for the living instead of flowers for the dead is the aim of the Swedish "Flower Fund" drive that has just scored its first signal triumph in the laying of the cornerstone of a large building designed exclusively for the aged and infirm, who otherwise might have to end their days in the poorhouse.
The idea of such a fund was launched about four years ago by Miss Alma Hedin, sister of Sven Hedin, the explorer, and now, thanks to many small contributions in lieu of floral tributes at funerals, enough money has been procured to guarantee the financing of the first building. Others will be started later.

New Ice Age Predicted
A French savant has predicted that a new ice age will seize the world within a few hundred years. He bases his conclusion on the fact that the world is using up its supply of carbonic acid gas faster than it is, or probably will be, manufactured.

The time is passed when the measure of the value of a memorial is quantity. I hope the time has come when that measure is quality. I care not whether the material be marble or granite, its future will be measured by the character of the design. It is quality that has preserved for us the finest examples in painting and sculpture. It is quality that will stamp our imprint upon cemeteries of the future. Simplicity, correct lines and proportions and proper ornamentation are the real fundamentals. A design that is right, material that is lasting, and perfect workmanship, spells success for the future of this industry and the beautification of the cemetery. Will you let me help you select the memorial for your lot. Call at show room. NO AGENTS.

Last of Kingly Line

The title "Last of the Goths" was bestowed upon Roderick, king of the Visigoths in Spain, who was defeated and slain by the Moors in 711 A. D. He was the thirty-fourth and last of the Visigothic line of kings, who reigned in Spain from 414 to 711 A. D. Southey has written a historical poem on this subject, entitled "Roderick, the Last of the Goths."—Kansas City Star.

Cannibal Ancestors

The discovery of a pile of human bones dating from the Neolithic period—at least 6,000 years ago—in a cave near Auch, in the south of France, has given rise to the theory that prehistoric men at that period were undoubtedly cannibals. The bones all bear marks of teeth and apparently form the remains of some gigantic cannibal feast.

Form of Crosses Varies

There is a slight difference between the Latin and Greek crosses. The lower branch of the Latin cross is considerably longer than the other three, while in the Greek cross all branches are of equal length. St. Andrew's cross consists of two shafts of equal length, bisecting each other diagonally in the form of the letter X.

The Cecil B. DeMille production, "The Golden Bed" a Paramount picture adapted by Jeanie Macpherson from the novel of the same name by Wallace Irwin, is the feature at the Met theater.

In the picture we have a decaying family whose one asset is their very beautiful daughter, Flora Lee, played by Lillian Rich, a new De Mille "find." There is a Cinderella sister (Vera Reynolds) who is always shoved into the background to give Flora Lee every advantage.

La Rocque has the role of a young man who runs a candy store in the village. He adores the beauty. She treats him as so much dirt under her feet. His business expands. He becomes king of a chain of candy stores.

At once he is the prey of the family, Flora Lee is groomed for him. As the children have grown up, Margaret (Miss Reynolds) has fallen very much in love with Admah Holtz, the part played by La Rocque. She fights for her love and loses.

All thru the picture there is the symbol of the golden bed—luxury. The map is wrecked, his life made a ruin. Flora Lee dies and we have the struggle back to regeneration and real love by Admah and Margaret.

The trio of players mentioned above appear in featured roles in the cast of "The Golden Bed" along with Warner Baxter, Theodore Kosloff and Julia Faye.

Robert Edeson, Henry Walthall and Robert Cain are but a few of the big names playing in support.

FORD SCHOOL

BOYS EARNED
MUCH MONEYOpportunity Given to Learn
Trades and Contribute to Support.

Seven hundred boys in the most unique school in the world during the year 1924, earned $400,000 for themselves and manufactured $770,000 worth of materials. That's the remarkable record of the Henry Ford Trade school in the eighth year of its existence.

The idea of such a school was conceived by Mr. Ford in 1916, and in October of that year it was organized and incorporated under the laws of Michigan as a private school. The spur behind the act on Mr. Ford's part was a desire to furnish the opportunity for boys to learn a trade; more especially boys whose circumstances make it imperative that they earn something toward their own support. And just now the popular school may be judged from the fact that at the present time the faculty comprises fifty instructors, the pupils number more than 700, and there are more than 3,000 boys on the waiting list.

Of course, with a waiting list of this magnitude, at present there is little hope for out of town boys being admitted. In fact, the institution is not big enough to accommodate even the Detroit youths who have felt the urge to learn and learn the Ford way.

While the remuneration is a consideration with all the pupils, a system of increasing the cash scholarship in accordance with the progress the lad makes in the class room as well as in the workshop is an incentive that develops in him a sense of responsibility and creates a desire to excel both in his theoretical and in his practical education.

Every six weeks the instructors, under whom the students study and work, award marks according to progress made. These reports determine the increase in the scholarship which commences at the modest sum of $7.20 a week when the boy is admitted to the school and grows to maximum of $18. The rapidity with which the maximum is reached rests solely with the student.

All the instructors are chosen not only for their ability as teachers, but also on account of their talent for keeping in close personal touch with the boys and there are few schools in the country with instructors whose personal popularity with the students is greater than prevails in the Henry Ford Trade School.

JULY NINTH

Is the Date Set For the County
Club Tour.

The County Club Tour Committee met April 27th to decide upon the date and to discuss other features of the Club tour.

July 9th was the date set for the tour.

The machines will leave Pickaway County early in the morning and arrive at the Ohio Penitentiary at an appointed hour. Warden Thomas has consented to the visit and will make every effort to give the boys and girls and all others on the tour, a very interesting and instructive trip through the institution.

The visit through the Pen will last until noon, then the touring party will go to the Ohio State University campus for the picnic dinner. An interesting afternoon will be planned at the University.

Each township will plan its own dinner and will take extra food for three or four visitors. Some members of the University faculty always enjoy eating with these live Buckeyes.

The Club leaders will arrange for transportation for their respective club members.

More news concerning the trip will appear later.

Make plans for July 9th.

THE MUTUAL FAITH OF SEVENTY

An American correspondent tried to get Marshal Foch's personal opinion of the election of Gen. Paul von Hindenburg as President of Germany.

"What can I say—what is there for me to say?" the Marshal answered. "You know I make a rule never to interfere in political matters." But a member of the Foch staff was not so reserved in his expression. "Marshal Foch is 73 years of age," he said, "and he knows pretty well what another man a little older thinks and how he feels. Marshal Foch's greatest aim is to preserve and to insure peace without further bloodshed, so it is reasonable to suppose that he implies the same motives to his German rival. I never during the war nor since heard Marshal Foch say a single word against Field Marshal von Hindenburg." The world will be glad to know that its peace is not going to be endangered by any word or motion of these national heroes, both past seventy, and therefore safe, sane and above all else, pacific. There is something to this class that does not encourage saber-rattling, either for itself or others. If youthful trouble-makers will keep out of it, Foch and Hindenburg should manage to keep their nations in as good a fellowship as two such ancient enemies can ever hope to be. Akron Beacon-Journal.

Civil War Fought by Boys

THE veterans of the Civil war are still fondly spoken of as "boys," "the boys in blue." Year after year for sixty years still "boys." It has become almost as specialized as a designation of the soldiers of the Civil war, as senator, as alderman. As age was supposed to mean wisdom, the highest legislative body of old was at first actually and later theoretically, at least, composed of old men. Senator, alderman, means simply, old man.

So the boys in blue, who were only boys when in that blue, have stayed boys in affectionate address ever since, says the Manchester Union. No succeeding war has carried that entitlement. In current conversation we hear the soldiers of the World war spoken of as "soldiers," "legionnaires," even as "veterans." But seldom indeed as "boys." Just why is this? How did the soldiers of the Civil war gain and keep the name "boys"?

Because they were boys, boys as the soldiers of none of our other wars were. That war was fought by boys. When the officer addressed them as "boys" he spoke a literal fact. When the general before a charge cried "boys" he addressed a body that might have been assembled from school and college yards, and were so assembled. There were majors and colonels under twenty. Charles Stoughton was colonel of a Vermont cavalry regiment at seventeen! Boys they were and boys they remained in name and spirit and are still.

There has always been a strange unaccountableness in the buoyancy of spirit of the soldier of the Civil war. It was the last great war that was also a great spectacle, fought over an immense territory, with imposing marches, immense rides, and it caught the imagination as modern wars do not. The dash of cavalry, the charge with the colors, has gone. The Civil war was a great sporting event, fought by boys with the high spirits that they would have fought a football game.

Animosity Forgotten

Still facing each other—but not in battle as they fought years ago in the Civil war—Maj. R. S. Anderson and Maj. James A. Abbott, doorkeepers at the senate, who have been faithful at their posts for more than a quarter of a century. Major Abbott, fighting for the Blue, and Major Anderson the Gray, faced each other at the Battle of Petersburg, Va. Now they are loyal friends and the old contention has been forgotten.

No Sectional Feeling in the Nation Today

There are days in America to celebrate and days to observe. One does not think of Memorial day as a time for celebration. Neither should it be given over to sadness because those for whom it has been set apart are the soldiers who have gone on to the greater adventure—to their final reward.

Memorial day in America came into being as a tribute to the men and the women who had made it possible for the Stars and Stripes to wave over all the land. It was a time for flowers to be strewn upon the graves of the fallen and in the waters that ran down into the sea, in memory of the sailors who lost their lives in the Civil war; it was a time for addresses and ceremonies, through which the memory might be kept green and the rising generation instructed in the debt owed those who had gone before. The time came when the old sectional bitterness passed, when the country reunited in spirit as well as in form. Then it was that the graves of the Confederate dead, whether in the North or the South, also received floral tokens. Across the years, the sections joined hands, love in their hearts instead of hate; love of deeds of bravery and sacrifice, whether made in the cause that triumphed or the cause that failed.

MODERN NIGHTS IN OLD BAGDAD

Amid the Dawn of Oil Concessions the Color Is Still There.

Washington, D. C.—Out of Bagdad, a thousand years ago, came the Thousand and One Nights.

Out of Bagdad, via the American consulate, comes a report based on observations of Sir Arnold Wilson along the Oman and Persian gulfs. These, says a bulletin from the National Geographic society, show that amid the dawn of oil concessions the color is still there!

"The very names have the tinkle of temple bells—Oman and Bahrein, Maskat, Bandar and Bushire—and the places bear out the exotic promise," says the bulletin.

"Maskat, half way up the Oman coast, is one of the most picturesque harbors in all the world. The town lies crammed into a narrow valley at the foot of volcanic crags. The harbor is a lake of deep blue, the houses stand on the very verge of the water, and ruined Portuguese forts crown the heights that command it on either side. A gap in the rocks renders life insupportable during the appalling heat of the summer months, when the sun's rays, reflected from the glowing rocks, scorch like an oven.

An Arab Weather Report.

"And if you pick up an Arab travel writer's account of this you read:

"The heat was so intense that it burned the marrow in the bones; the sword in its scabbard melted like wax, and the gems which adorned the handles of the dagger were reduced to coal. In the plains the chase, became a matter of perfect ease, for the desert was filled with roasted gazelles."

"And if one asks an explanation of a natural phenomenon he realizes that the imagination which conceived All Baba still lives in stories such as this:

"Solomon was once in the Persian gulf in a rowing-boat; he dabbled his hand in the water, as landmen will, and dropped his signet ring. A porpoise was at hand.

"Porpoise, find my ring" said Solomon.

"On my head, on my eyes," said the porpoise, and commenced to dive.

"After a time he came to the surface, 'Solomon,' he said, 'I can't find it.'"

"Look again," said Solomon.

"The porpoise dived afresh, and again reported failure.

"Look again," said Solomon.

"Again the porpoise came to the surface.

"Solomon," he said, "it is no good, I can't find it." Solomon was wroth.

"Go on looking till you find it," he said, and now, whenever a porpoise sees a boat, he approaches it, diving incessantly because he thinks Solomon may be on board. When there is no boat in sight he does not look for the ring, because he is lazy, like a human being."

"Nature adds bizarre touches of her own. The Persian gulf is famous for displays of phosphorescence by night. The writer tells of a night when all around his vessel the sea glowed with pale blue light; the ripples thrown out on either side became diverging streams of lambent flame; the crest of every wave glowed as though the sea was afire; around the bows porpoises in ghostly brilliance; the wake shown with a light that made the moon seem pale.

"Bushire is a port—a port where a large ship may have to anchor six miles off shore unless the tides enable it to ride to the inner anchorage three miles nearer. The city is virtually an island, separated from the mainland by nine miles of mud flats often impassable even by mules. Is the inner harbor, riding at anchor, is the Persepolis, an ancient German cruiser, the sole representative of the Persian navy. It is for sale.

How "Master Baffin" Died.

"Near Bandar Abbas is Ormuz, once the Bombay of South Persia, today almost deserted. 'It has no fresh water save what the fruitful clouds weep over her, in sorrow of her desolation late so populous' but it gives the traveler pause for memory of its high adventures. The British and the Portuguese fought there for mastery of the eastern seas; there the discoverer of Baffin's bay met death.

"Master Baffin went on shore with his geometrical instruments, for the taking of the height and distance of the castle wall, for the better leveling of his piece to make his shot; but as he was about the same, he received a small shot from the castle into his belly, wherewith he gave three leaps by report, and died immediately."

"The 1925 commerce statistics will inform you further that Ormuz trades in red oxide and rock salt for local use."

"Interest in the Arabian side of the Persian gulf centers about Bahrein, the island of pearls, where the rich Arab merchants have electric light and fans and automobiles. Then there is the Pirate coast, described as a desolate, wind-swept shore and tangle of narrow creeks and shallow lagoons. Here live many retired pirates who have turned their attention to the pearl industry.

"Even oil, in the Persian gulf, I not without its romance, when a true observer quotes Keats:

"And divine liquids come with odorous ooze

Through the cold serpent-pipe refreshfully."

Fertilizers Are Getting Better

Colleges and Experiment Stations Given Credit for Improvement.

There is ample evidence to indicate that the quality of fertilizer which farmers are buying is getting better each year. This improvement can be traced to the work which the agricultural colleges and experiment stations have been carrying on for several years in co-operation with fertilizer manufacturers through the soil improvement committee of the National Fertilizer association. The following brief summary of the situation in a few typical states should be of interest:

Increase in Indiana.

In his last report, Prof. E. G. Proulx, state chemist of Indiana, says, "Indiana in four years has changed from a low-grade fertilizer state to a high-grade fertilizer state and has learned that plant food makes the fertilizer." During these four years, the total quantity of nitrogen sold in Indiana increased by 29 per cent and potash by 133 per cent, while phosphoric acid decreased by 4 per cent.

Figures for Ohio, compiled by Professor Bear, show that in one year, 1923 compared with 1922, high-analysis fertilizers increased .68 per cent and that the sale of those included in the "Ohio Standard Dozen" list increased 171 per cent.

In Maryland, those analyses of which 1,000 tons or more were sold show an increase of 24 per cent for ammonia and 56 per cent for potash in 1923 as compared with 1921.

Progress in Missouri.

The following statement by Director Mumford, which appears in the latest fertilizer inspection bulletin issued by the Missouri experiment station, is indicative of the progress that is being made in that state:

"The experiment station has also conferred directly with the manufacturers of fertilizer material and has encouraged them to manufacture the brands of fertilizers that ought to be used in this state. The result of these efforts has been very gratifying. The manufacturer on one hand has pushed the sale of good fertilizers adapted to Missouri conditions, and the farmer on the other hand has followed the advice of the experiment station, to his great profit."

Progress in Michigan is clearly indicated by the following statement made by Prof. O. B. Price in a recent issue of the Michigan Farmer:

"In 1912 50 per cent of the brands sampled were low-analysis material; in 1917, 68 per cent were low analysis; in 1922, 31 per cent, and in 1923 only 17 per cent."

Manufacturers are rapidly reducing the number of grades offered for sale and increasing the actual plant-food content of those fertilizers that are sold.

Crops to Follow Early Vegetables in Garden

Spinach, mustard, lettuce and radishes are off the ground early and the ground is released for other crops, but we should plant something that will not be troubled by the insect pests that are common to any of these. A second planting of beets will be good for this purpose, for the aphids is the worst pest that is likely to be on these early vegetables and the beets will not be troubled. After the bean crop is picked follow it with sweet corn, planting even before the beans are off. After any crop coming off in early June plant rutabagas, and in July plant turnips, Chinese cabbage, winter radishes, or set any of the midsummer cabbages to head in the fall. The potatoes may be dug in July and followed with sweet corn of an early variety, which would be planted earlier and be large enough to permit the potato digging to serve as a cultivation.

Potatoes Are Attacked by Different Diseases

Potatoes throughout the United States are attacked by quite a large number of diseases, which are transmitted either within the seed tuber, or upon it. Certain ones of these are now recognized by the botanists and plant pathologists as "deterioration" diseases. It has always been a theory of farmers and experienced growers that potatoes "run out," says Professor Bolley of the North Dakota College of Agriculture.

The best experts in the potato business also admit that potatoes often do "run out," become quite worthless as to type, etc. These deterioration diseases which are now being studied have always existed, but were not recognized. They are of such nature that under ordinary methods of cultivation and handling, potatoes may be expected to run out. We are, however, quite hopeful that potatoes can be kept from running out.

Some Garden Mistakes

There are a number of mistakes frequently made which have a tendency to reduce the value of a garden. The first one is in making a plan which covers too large an area. It may be that when the first warm days of springtime arrive, in the first flush of enthusiasm we will plan a larger garden than we can properly care for. In course of time the rush of farm work comes on, the weeds in the garden get the start of the vegetables, and we let the whole thing go.

TAKE UP HOBBY TO REST TIRED NERVES

Physician's Advice to Overworked Business Man.

A friend who was on the verge of a serious nervous breakdown went to a great specialist to seek advice, Richard Worth relates, in the Washington Post. The very first question the doctor asked him was, "What hobbies have you?"

My friend looked rather dumfounded. Then he explained that he was a busy man and that apart from an occasional round of golf he had no time for hobbies.

"Then we can put our finger on the real cause of your nerves," said the specialist. He saw, I suppose, that my friend was inclined to be skeptical, so he indulged in a little personal reminiscence.

"There are a great many people who seem to think that we doctors are never ill," he said. "They think that because we may be able to prescribe for their ailments—real or imaginary—we must, of necessity, keep to the health rules we may be obliged to lay down for them."

He smiled. "There never was a bigger fallacy," he continued. "We do get very run down—and very often the physician cannot heal himself. Two years ago I was faced with the self-same trouble that has sent you to me. Do you know how I cured myself of 'nerves'? Well, I'll tell you. I learned to knit—and in three months' time I was a different man!"

My friend started at him in speechless amazement.

"One of my patients—a man who is the head of a great legal firm—who was also faced with a nervous breakdown, simply because, like yourself, he put business first and foremost and never gave a thought to anything else, took my advice. He looked round until he found a hobby that appealed to him. He was a different man in six months."

"Do you know what he does in his leisure moments now? He makes furniture—and very excellent work he is turning out!"

"One reason why the craze for crossword puzzles has spread so rapidly is because brain and other workers find in the problems an outlet for 'nerves'. That may sound curious—but it is nevertheless perfectly true. The forced concentration makes them forget their business and other cares."

"My advice to 'jumpy' folk is this—find a hobby that appeals to you—and work at it. In that lies salvation and a sound mind in a sound body."

A Fat Man's Chance

By J. R. McCARTHY

RUFUS BURTON, he of the glaring red hair and the incredibly optimistic disposition, was not a man to be discouraged by trifles. Where a modern Cassius, with his lean and hungry look, would have shot up the boss and then gone home and pickled his meager lungs in gas, Rufus Burton merely leaned back in his overburdened chair and let his waistband roll with laughter. He sat upon life complacently, and squashed the troubles out of it, as a fat man should.

Yet today the impossible had happened. Rufus Burton's huge girth did not roll. His mighty "Ho—ho!" did not rock the office walls. The fact is, Burton—the whole three hundred pounds of him—was glum.

For Burton had conceived a great idea, and the chief had pooh-pooh'd.

So Rufus sat sagging in his chair, glum as last week's cream-puff.

But not for nothing did the bowl of his pipe grow hot, and his round eyes watch the maneuvers of a spider on the ceiling. Burton's round brain was working in his round head. He was evolving a scheme. It might not work; it might work; it must work.

"If it takes ten years," he told the spider. "I'm going to put that idea through that dumb-bell Green's head."

The fat man was like that. His loyalty to Green was second only to his loyalty to the firm of which Green was chief. It would never have entered his head to take his pet idea to some other advertising agency. The Green company was his company—and his company and his idea must somehow be got together.

The spider on the ceiling had completed her web and retired into obscurity. Her trap was set. Presently a fly—Oho! Burton's sagging cheeks stiffened. He even smiled.

Timothy Green, the chief, passed his desk a few minutes later. "Well, Rufus, have you forgotten that fool scheme of yours and got back to honest work?"

But the fat man was his old self again. He grinned. "I haven't forgotten the scheme, but I've got back to work. I'm after some one to write the Ladies' specialty copy, since Miss Simpson is to get married. What do you think of Miss Dorothy Hall, who writes the style column in the News?"

Now, Burton happened to know very well what Green thought of the good-looking Dorothy Hall. This, in fact, was why he asked. Green thought of her very much as Burton himself thought of her, which was pretty complimentary thinking, to say the least.

"Can we afford her?" Green asked. "That's the only question, of course. But she can produce the stuff. Guess we'd better arrange to afford her."

"All right," said the chief, with enthusiasm. "Go get her."

Thus it was that Miss Dorothy Hall was installed where Rufus Burton could admire her, and where Green, when he was lucky, could have a word with her. Miss Dorothy entered into her new work with a keenness which surprised even Burton, who had admired her brains (from a safe distance) ever since she had returned from college and entered the employ of the News two years before.

She was quick as lightning to understand the idea, and soundly efficient in its execution. No wonder, then, that when Burton told her of his great idea—which was to triple an important branch of the business.

But he was constrained to warn her. "Don't say a word about this idea to Mr. Green, Miss Dorothy. He can't see it with a telescope, and the mere mention of it throws him into a rage."

"Why, that is absurd! Here you propose to secure for his company a practical monopoly on a big branch of the advertising business, new to this city, and he can't see it! This idea of booklets which will entertain the children, coupled with advertising to mothers of children's goods is a really big thing. It'll take the department stores by storm. You can sign them up easily. And I can write the copy. Mr. Green really must be made to see it!"

"No," said Burton emphatically. "Better not say a word to him about it. It makes him mad."

Three weeks later Rufus Burton returned, fatter and funnier than ever, from his vacation. When he went to the office, Miss Dorothy was not at her desk. But presently the door to Green's office opened, and the young lady in question came out. She was dressed for the street.

"Oh, Miss Dorothy, I'm glad to see you again," said the round man.

The young lady smiled and held out her hand. "Mrs. Green," she corrected him, archly.

Burton watched her disappear through the outer door. He was still standing, open-mouthed, when Green appeared and stepped up to him jauntily.

"Congratulations!" mumbled the fat man, meekly.

"Thank you! And say, Burton, I've decided to try out that idea of yours. I—I—er—Mrs. Green thinks it's great."

Two minutes later Rufus Burton, alone, leaned back dangerously in his overburdened chair. His jolly bulk rolled with the laughter of an incurable optimist.

A new spider was on the ceiling. "Nobody loves a fat man," Burton told the new spider, "but it takes a lot more than one thin man to beat him!"

Queer Jungle Calls of Dahomey Natives

When the barefooted black men travel in their own country they move as silently as specters. If they are not talking, or singing, or shrilly calling to each other, one does not hear them approach unless it be by the low rustle of their bodies against the leaves.

On such occasions, a file of them winding through the bushes suggests a party of shades bound on some Stygian expedition.

"O-Kou! O-Kou! O-Kou!"

That is the jungle greeting of the Dahomey black man. As soon as two travelers catch sight of each other in the distance they begin to shout this call. As they approach they lower their voices until the "O-Kou!" sinks to a mere murmur as they pass; then it rises again louder and louder as they separate until lost in the distance.

"O-Kou! O-Kou! O-Kou!"

A greeting filled with fear. Doubtless it means something like this: "I know where you are! I know where you are!"—Henri de Kerillis in L'Echo de Paris.

There is no "good luck" portent more generally believed in than that connected with black cats. If one enters the house it must not be driven away. If we meet one in the street, the omen is good, and if it should come and rub itself against us, our luck is right in. Promptly we stoop and stroke it—to make quite certain.

If that is your custom, do you know that you are propitiating the Evil One? Your ancestors in the Middle Ages hated black cats. They regarded them as being inhabited by Satan himself, or, at any rate, by one of his evil spirits. So when they stroked a black cat it was not to bring good luck but to avert ill-luck. By pleasing the cat they turned the devil from his wicked purpose. If you condemn the notion as silly and superstitious, why do you continue it?

Philadelphia has played an important part in American archery. Its suburbs have produced two national champions, and the first archery association in the United States was the United Bowmen of Philadelphia, formed in 1828.

The annual contest drew as many as 2,000 spectators. There must have been something of the flavor of the days of Merrie England about it, when the king's archers were his strongest and bravest and most valiant knights. Then a Welsh archer shot an arrow through an oak door four inches thick, "with such force the shaft penetrated a hand's breadth on the other side." And the English archers then advanced one step forward and shot their arrows with such quickness it seemed as if it snowed.

There must have been something of the flavor of the days of Merrie England about it, when the king's archers were his strongest and bravest and most valiant knights. Then a Welsh archer shot an arrow through an oak door four inches thick, "with such force the shaft penetrated a hand's breadth on the other side." And the English archers then advanced one step forward and shot their arrows with such quickness it seemed as if it snowed.

Use for the Cork

A young woman called at the house of a doctor, and, after discoursing on all the topics of the day, began to tell him her ailments. Among other things, she said she was greatly alarmed by a "sinking feeling."

The doctor prepared a bottle of medicine and gave it to her, with directions as to how it should be taken. The woman talked on and on, until at length, after many vain efforts on the doctor's part to get rid of her, she made for the door. She had just opened it when she turned and said:

"Oh, doctor, what shall I do if this medicine does not cure me?"

"Take the cork," he retorted. "They tell me that cork is good for a sinking feeling."

Trees and Lightning

No tree is immune from lightning but among trees of the same kind the one standing well above its neighbors is in most danger, even in a dense forest. This may be due to the greater height of the trees or the kind of ground it stands on. Trees growing in the open are in more danger than those in a thick stand of timber, as are also those growing along an avenue or border of woods. Those growing in moist soil along the banks of a stream are better conductors for lightning than those growing in drier soil.—Exchange.

Dogs Without Tails

A curious breed of dogs is owned by Enara and Kuntokelo, Laplanders. These dogs are born without tails, which is considered a very fortunate characteristic, in that the wolves cannot have that member to catch hold of in a chase. The wolves prey upon the Lapps' reindeer, which the dogs are trained to guard, with the result of frequent free-for-all fights. The tailless dog was not always thus, but is the result of the docking process practiced upon generations of ancestors until now he is born without a tail.

Held as Tomb of Rachel

The tomb of Rachel is a Mohammedan wely, or tomb, marking the burial place of Rachel, the wife of the patriarch, Jacob. It is situated about five miles north of Bethlehem. Jewish, Christian and Mohammedan tradition agree in identifying this spot with the tomb of Rachel, the wife of Jacob.

"And Rachel died, and was buried in the way to Ephrath, which is Bethlehem. And Jacob set a pillar upon her grave; that is the pillar of Rachel's grave unto this day."—Genesis 35: 19-20.—Kansas City Star.

KEEPING WELL

WHAT DOES BABY PUT IN ITS MOUTH?

DR. FREDERICK R. GREEN Editor of "HEALTH"

GIVE a baby almost anything and it will at once try to put it into its mouth. It may be a piece of fruit or a stove poker, an old shoe or a bite of candy. In it goes just the same. When all else fails, there's the baby's own thumb. Apparently, its mouth must be kept full of something.

This instinctive tendency is not so bad as long as the objects are too large to swallow. But babies don't discriminate, and too often small, hard, sharp objects are not only put into the mouth but either swallowed or sucked down the windpipe or into the lungs.

The variety of such objects is surprising. They may include tacks, nails, screws, staples, nuts, safety pins, open or closed; beans, toys, bones and keys. Sometimes the child is seen to swallow the object, sometimes it is missing after having been seen in the baby's hands or mouth, and it is assumed that the child swallowed it.

The immediate effect of such an accident depends on the size and shape of the object, also on whether it goes into the stomach or is drawn into the lungs. If the object is large enough to plug up the windpipe the child may die in a few minutes from suffocation. Beans, small nuts or round toys have many times produced death before they could be removed.

If the object is small, it may pass through the larynx and lodge in one of the smaller air passages without causing any discomfort at the time. Doctor Jackson of Philadelphia, who has had wide experience in this sort of cases, tells in a recent article of a child of fifteen months who got a thin piece of glass from a broken Christmas tree ornament lodged in its larynx, where it remained for four and one-half months without causing any apparent discomfort to the child.

On the other hand the child may be taken with a persistent cough almost as soon as the foreign body is drawn into the lungs. The child, if old enough to describe its sensations, may complain of a sharp pain near its Adam's apple or in one or both ears. Swallowing may be painful and breathing difficult.

The outcome depends on the object swallowed and the point where it lodges. The safest plan is to keep all loose and harmful objects out of the baby's reach. Don't give him anything to play with that can hurt him. If the baby does swallow some harmful object, don't try to get it out yourself. You may push it farther down and do great harm. Get a doctor and have an X-ray picture taken. Present day methods and instruments can remove most foreign bodies, even from the lungs themselves.

Wanted to Be Hugged

Doris, three years old, awoke the other morning full of the child's joy of being alive. First she enthusiastically hugged mother, then as gleefully hugged daddy. She waited a few seconds and, there being no apparent intention on the part of either parent to reciprocate her affectionate greetings, said:

"I wish I had some one to hug me."

TO CLOSE DECORATION DAY

At a meeting of the chamber of commerce held Tuesday evening, a motion was introduced and passed, recommending that the business men of the city observe Decoration day by closing their places of business. Some objection to closing the entire day was made as the holiday falls on Saturday and that closing the whole day would disappoint farmers who come to this city to trade particularly on Saturday.

J. Wallace Crist of the Crist Department store, announced that their store would be closed all day, but would be open Friday evening for trade.
